Program Description

This conference will focus on how people who suffer from trauma and loss can often find positive changes in the aftermath of these tragedies. The concept that will be explored is called "posttraumatic growth", and it has been a documented outcome in people who have experienced a variety of events, including natural disasters, serious illness, bereavement, crime, and war. Participants will learn about the varieties of posttraumatic growth, and the process by which it occurs. They will also be introduced to ways to facilitate these changes in individuals, and how similar transformations can occur in groups, communities and societies.

Program Objectives

At the conclusion of this conference, participants will be able to:

- Describe the posttraumatic growth process from the time of the traumatic events to the development of growth outcomes.
- Identify the five types of posttraumatic growth
- Identify and apply five elements of posttraumatic growth facilitation
- Recognize the conceptual and empirical connections and distinctions between posttraumatic growth and resilience and other trauma-related concepts.

Program Speaker

Richard Tedeschi, Ph.D.

is Professor of Psychology at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, where he is on the core faculty for the Health Psychology Ph.D. program. He has published several books on posttraumatic growth, an area of research that he developed that examines personal transformations in the aftermath of traumatic life events.

Dr. Tedeschi serves as a consultant to the American Psychological Association on trauma and resilience, is a Fellow of the Division of Trauma Psychology, and is Past President of the North Carolina Psychological Association.
